Climbing

High up in the apple tree climbing I go,
 With the sky above me, the earth below.
 Each branch is the step of a wonderful stair
 Which leads to the town I see shining up there.

Climbing, climbing, higher and higher,
 The branches blow and I see a spire,
 The gleam of a turret, the glint of a dome,
 All sparkling and bright, like white sea foam.

On and on, from bough to bough,
 The leaves are thick, but I push my way through;
 Before, I have always had to stop,
 But to-day I am sure I shall reach the top.

Today to the end of the marvelous stair,
 Where those glittering pinnacles flash in the air!
 Climbing, climbing, higher I go,
 With the sky close above me, the earth far below.

Born in Chicago in 1901 and raised in Missouri, Disney was the fourth son among five siblings. His father, Elias, was a domineering figure who was allegedly abusive. He was unsuccessful to make ends meet for the family. To escape from his stressful circumstances, Young Disney found solace in drawing. Still, he would watch his older brothers, one by one, run off from home to escape their father. When Disney was 16, he dropped out of school to join the Army but was rejected for being underage. Instead, he joined the Red Cross and was sent to France for a year to drive an ambulance. He moved back to the United States in 1919.

When he returned home from war, Disney became an apprentice at a Kansas City commercial art studio. Itching to set off, he and his older brother, Roy, launched their own cartoon business, Laugh-O-Gram Studios, in 1920, but the company went bankrupt a couple of years later. With the loss of his first business, Disney packed his bags, and with just forty dollars to his name, took off to Los Angeles to try his hand at acting. But he failed at that, too. Still, there was a silver lining to his move. AUGUST 30, 2019

JAMIE RAPPAPORT CLARK

When you think of your favourite beach, what do you see? May be it's a picture of a lifeguard and umbrellas as far as the eye can see. You might fondly remember family traditions. You might have a framed photo of a favourite sunset. Summer is a time when families all over the country flock to the beach in search of sun, sand, surf and fun.

Contd...

National Beach Day is August 30th, and wildlife is also gathering on the coasts. Migratory birds, like black skimmers, least terns and plovers, seas turtles, horseshoe crabs, dolphins playing in the surf, ospreys, sea otters and whales all enjoy the beach like we do. If you are headed to a beach this Labor Day weekend, take some time to appreciate the natural world that surrounds you.

Coasts and beaches are facing a large number of threats, including climate change-related impacts that are destroying coasts around the country.

Storms rip through barrier islands, destroying important nesting grounds for sea turtles, habitat for beach mice and foraging areas for migratory shorebirds, as well as human lives and communities. Extreme pollution from agricultural areas, cities and mining and coal ash plants is running down river systems, creating dead zones and spreading disease. Millions of tons of plastic pollution are washing up on uninhabited beaches and clogging our oceans, drowning and choking marine mammals and breaking down into microplastics so fine that they are showing up in the tissue of fish and in zooplankton. Offshore drilling threatens cetaceans with seismic testing and the risk of an oil spill is all over.

As we saw with Exxon Valdez and Deepwater Horizon, it's not a matter of if, but when, another spill will occur. When oil spills, no wildlife or habitat is spared, and the effects continue to be felt decades later.
