10 March, 2025

Dear Rahul,

I am thrilled to invite you and your family to the auspicious occasion of my sister's wedding ceremony. The marriage will take place on 26 April, 2025. We are hosting a grand wedding party at our own home.

We request the presence of your whole family to share our joy. Please come and shower your blessings to the bride and bridegroom for their new journey together. We strictly request no gifts; your presence is the greatest gift for us.

Looking forward to celebrating together!

With love,

Sangam Gautam

Ans 7. (Views on Extravagant Celebrations)

Extravagance in Festivals: A Growing Concern

In our society, festivals and celebrations have gradually shifted from being spiritual and cultural events to grand platforms for showing off. Many people tend to spend money far beyond their financial capacity simply to maintain social status. They take huge loans to organize lavish weddings, grand feasts, and buy expensive clothes. This unnecessary competition creates immense financial and mental pressure on middle-class families, forcing them into a cycle of debt and poverty.

In my view, we must preserve the true essence of our festivals rather than commercializing them. Celebrations should be about love, togetherness, and cultural harmony, not a display of wealth. Social awareness programs should be conducted to discourage extravagant spending. If we choose simplicity over show-off, we can celebrate our festivals joyfully without any economic burden, making society more equal and peaceful.

Ans 8. (Book Review)

Book Review: Muna Madan

Title: Muna Madan

Author: Laxmi Prasad Devkota

Genre: Epic Poem (Khandakavya)

"Muna Madan" is a masterpiece of Nepali literature written by the great poet Laxmi Prasad Devkota. The plot revolves around Madan, a loving husband who travels to Lhasa to earn wealth to fulfill his mother's desires and give his wife, Muna, a better life. Despite Muna's tearful pleas not to leave her, he departs. On his journey back, he falls sick and is abandoned by his friends. He is rescued by a compassionate Tibetan man (Bhote), which highlights the core theme: humanity is defined by a big heart, not by caste or wealth.

The greatest strength of the book lies in its emotional depth and beautiful use of the Jhyaure folk meter, making it highly relatable to common Nepali people. The portrayal of Muna's pure love and the Bhote's selfless humanity is deeply moving. However, the tragic ending where Muna dies of sorrow and Madan follows suit may feel overwhelmingly depressing to some readers.

I highly recommend this book to everyone. It teaches the invaluable lesson that money is just "dirt of the hands," and true richness lies in love, humanity, and compassion.
